

The Revolutionary FAR Overhaul: What Happens Next?

Help guide the future of federal buying

The Revolutionary Federal Acquisition Regulation (FAR) Overhaul will reset the foundation of federal buying, by delivering a rewritten and streamlined FAR that is simpler, clearer, and structured for speed. Agencies are beginning to use an authorized version of the streamlined rulebook until the FAR is finalized through the formal rulemaking process. This historic shift marks the start of a new era in federal acquisition. We invite you to be part of this transition.

As agencies move to the authorized version of the streamlined rulebook, the Office of Federal Procurement Policy (OFPP), Office of Management & Budget is hosting a crowdsourcing campaign, now through January 7, 2026, to gather your feedback on the acquisition practices that agencies should start, stop, continue, adjust, or scale in the new era of federal acquisition.

All are welcome to participate. We are most interested in ideas that:

- Reduce cost or burden for the government and businesses
- Increase competition, such as by making it easier for businesses to submit proposals
- Significantly improve the speed of the acquisition process, such as by removing unnecessary steps in the procurement process
- Point to legacy practices that conflict with streamlined buying principles
- Highlight useful practices used today that support faster buying, increased competition, and better outcomes

Click HERE to participate in this campaign

Your contributions will help shape the practices that will guide federal buying for the next generation. I look forward to your feedback.

Thank you for helping us build the new era of federal acquisition.

Hon. Dr. Kevin Rhodes, PMP
Administrator
Office of Federal Procurement Policy
Office of Management and Budget
Executive Office of the President (EOP)